War is a business

Sources: Rebellion

War beats its drums, the din of death seems to be coming, the stubbornness of possessing and dominating imprints a new chapter of tensions in the West.

The rabid empires are preparing to dispute one more trophy, they do not care how many people could be sacrificed or how much expense the armament means, moreover, the industry that rubs its hands is precisely the military, are they the Russians or the Yankees?, maybe it is vice versa or the same, at last, now and as always, it is a geopolitical rearrangement of the interest of capital, it is the monopolies that lead the vanguard, regardless of whether they sometimes disguise themselves as nationalism or independence, in this case I do not find the slot of justice, and although anti-imperialism would point first to the United States, the truth is that the Sino-Russian axis is not far behind, we live in the era of imperialism and the final phase of capitalism, Lenin has already warned for more than a hundred years.

The vast majority of the global press points to Russia as the bad guy, the "enemy of civilization" that seeks to satisfy their interests, and perhaps this time they will hit him a little more, but it is also true that in that discourse two great truths are hidden in disguise. First, the old and rancid right continues to equate the current Russian power with the USSR, a premise that is false, very, very false, but that serves to revile communism, this counterrevolutionary discourse is sown as ideological manipulation to impact the new generations who grew up without knowing the communist project and knowing about its postulates, this being one more of the stages of the world class struggle in the field of ideas. In a second intention, this discourse is used to equate the United States and its allies with the supposedly "good", the propaganda that for decades we have seen in Hollywood cinema, television, the press and now on the Internet, is reactivated seeking the consensus of the populations to, in theory, exalt the so-called values of American "freedom", something that means, among other things, that whoever is not with the Yankee empire is an "enemy" of the West.

Far from these two false premises, the truth is that this, like most wars that occurred in periods of capitalist crisis, its reason and objective is to rearrange the balance between empires and serve as an escape valve for the conflicts that occur within the participating nations. In this new escalation of imperialist disputes, what matters least is the well-being of humanity, the evidence?, because it is simple, why instead of investing millions of dollars in weapons for war, all that resource is not allocated to break the inequality gap that the Covid-19 pandemic has brought to light?, Why, instead of an urgent meeting of the UN to discuss issues related to war, a great global assembly was not convened to guarantee health throughout the world?, the answer is clear, war is a business and is connatural to capitalism always inhuman.

None of the imperialist axes is in favor of humanity and our America knows this very well, having been turned into the field of dispute of its economic interest. In this new escalation of capitalist war, the only way out for the proletariat and the oppressed is undoubtedly global socialism.
