They take us for idiots

The population must be deceived into consenting or, at least, not opposing war, Julian Assange explained a few years ago... Obviously, Assange's consideration is valid for both sides of this war, but what is being talked about here is ours, the feed with which our "informers" feed us spiritually every day.

If one examines the September 1, 1939, edition of La Vanguardia, the day World War II began in Europe with the German invasion of Poland, the reader will come across the headline, "A Polish Blow Degenerates into Open Struggle with German Forces." The next day the newspaper's correspondent in Berlin, Ramón Garriga, reports the beginning of the German invasion of Poland as "a German counterattack in response to the aggressions of which German soldiers have been victims in recent days." But next to that, in a small box, that September 2 you could read a report, very tiny, on "German operations according to the Poles" and even noted the "Proclamation of the Polish President". That is, within the confines of the newspaper of a regime allied with the Nazis, everyone could make a certain composition of place and draw their own conclusions about what was really happening.

Now, to get an idea of what is happening in Ukraine, officially an "unprovoked invasion" that began on February 24 that lacks a quarter of a century of precedent, you have to get out of the official and established media, explore the alternatives, Russian propaganda and so on, and despite this gymnasium. You don't always get a clear idea of what's going on.

In any case, if what they tell us about this war were the truth, there would be no need to censor the Russian media, nor the voices dissatisfied with the official narrative even on social networks, nor the propaganda factories of NATO, whose dominance of Western think tanks and media is already considerable (as in Russia but in reverse), They blessed us with their primitive good news McCarthyist.

Nafo/Ofan, a NATO apparatus that presents itself as an initiative of "civil society", divides, for example, into five groups Westerners who dissatisfied with the official Atlanticist discourse on the war whom it presents as "apologists for the genocide" allegedly perpetrated by Russia in Ukraine according to the trivialization of the concept practiced by both sides. In this gallery of accomplices we have: 1) the "communists", who believe that Russia is a kind of USSR, 2) the "left-wing anti-fascists", who think that because they have certain problems with neo-Nazis, the government and nationalist society of Ukraine is Nazi, 3) the "ultra-rightists" who sympathize with the "fachas" aspects of the Kremlin's argument, 4) the "cabezotas" who always carry the opposite and that if they read in the "white" newspaper, they say, "Aha, then it is black", and 5) the "dumb pacifists", with the flower in the macuto and the lost look in a naïve world with the rainbow in the background.... According to The Grayzone How the pro-Ukraine NAFO troll operation crowd-funds war criminals – The Grayzone, this sympathetic "civil society organization" was founded by an anti-Semitic Pole to raise money for the Georgian Legion, a militia accused of crimes such as executing prisoners with convicted murderers in its ranks.

Know Your Western Genocide

A  educational resource

A. The communist

Thinks Russia is still communist, & is standing up for the little guy against the evil corporate west. Has absolutely no grasp of the reality of the modern world. Denser than a neutron star.

B. The lefty antifascist (subtype of A)

Thinks a country having issues with neo-nazis (as many countries do), means that the whole society and it's Government are fascist. Ignores polls showing how false that is, & evidence that there are just as many fascists in Russia. Thinks he/she is really clever.

NAFO NATO Meet the Apologists for Western Genocide

NATO's collaboration with the extreme right and its intense use of terrorism is a well-known and documented aspect of European history Bommeleeër, the crime novel by Luxembourg – Rafael Poch de Feliu and logically in the current conflict is becoming very topical.

A study by the University of Adelaide MASSIVE ANTI-RUSSIAN 'BOT ARMY' EXPOSED BY AUSTRALIAN RESEARCHERS – Declassified Australia ontweets from the war in Ukraine, finds that we are immersed in a massive disinformation campaign on social networks. The study examined five million ontweets generated in the first weeks of the Russian invasion and revealed that 80% of them were generated in "factories" for propaganda. 90% of those fabricated messages were launched from pro-Ukrainian accounts and only 7% from Russian factories. To get an idea, on the first day of the war, up to 38,000 tweets per hour were generated from these factories under the hashtag "I am with Ukraine".

"Bot armies" are underway in the war between Ukraine and Russia, with automated "bot" accounts sending up to 80% of tweets in the study's sample size of more than 5 million tweets, with anti-Russia accounts comprising 90.2% of all accounts. Here, shelves of confiscated GSM portals, containing hundreds of sim cards that use the mobile network to create thousands of fake bot accounts to distribute millions of fake tweets. "We fight with communication, this is a fight, we must conquer minds," Josep Borrell said in October in a galvanizing speech of ambassadors of the European Union too meek and lazy, in his words. And since you have to "conquer minds" it is necessary to simplify the message and turn a complex film into a Hollywood script of good and bad for children. Some examples:

According to the UN Refugee Agency (UNHCR) there are 2.3 million Ukrainian refugees in Central/Eastern Europe, including 1.5 million in Poland, in addition to around one million in Germany. There are also 2.8 million in Russia, the country that has received the most, but the latter are frequently portrayed as "deported" by Kiev's narrative and rarely mentioned as human beings in distress in the Western media. (This documentary «Человек и война» // «Скажи Гордеевой» – YouTube by Katerina Gordeyeva who interviews refugees from Mariupol in Warsaw, Berlin, Moscow, Rostov, Lvov and other cities, offers the panorama of a complex reality).

– Russian nuclear maneuvers are presented as "Putin's blackmail", those of NATO ("Defender") as "a sign of the Alliance's credibility".

When Amnesty International says that the Ukrainian army also commits war crimes, the matter is quietly covered up, including the angry reaction of the Kiev government punishing the organization by denying it access and demanding rectifications. Something similar happens with the disappeared, silenced, detained or murdered members of the Ukrainian left, the outlawed political forces, closed media, the reprisals against "collaborators" in the reconquered territories, etc.

The International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) denounces, with good reason, the dangers surrounding the Zaporozhie nuclear power plant, but does not clarify who bombs the surroundings of that plant that is occupied by the Russian army. The fact that, as in so many other "international organizations" the majority package of actions of that organization is held by Western countries, determines the lack of clarity of the denunciations of its president, the Argentine Rafael Grossi, about the evident authorship of the bombings of that plant.

When in August an attack is committed in Moscow that kills a young right-wing journalist, Daria Dugina, daughter of a marginal ultra philosopher, Aleksandr Dugin, who according to Western legend has great influence in the Kremlin (the relevance of ideology in this conflict is part of that legend), that is not "terrorism".

-When in September the Russian gas pipelines that supplied Germany, which were already the target of a CIA attack verursachte mittels Software Pipeline-Explosion in Sowjetunion 1982 – Netzpolitik – derStandard.at › Webin the beginnings of gas cooperation between the USSR and Germany in the eighties, and that happens in the Baltic, surely the maritime region of the world most controlled by NATO and shortly after the demonstrations began in Germany to restore that flow, the debate on authorship is diluted, the German government denies explanations to its deputies alleging reasons of "public welfare" (Staatswohl) and Atlanticist journalism makes a fool talking about "mystery" or pointing directly to Russia as the author of the attacks.

-When in October, after the attack on the 8th against the Crimean bridge (6 dead) and the military setbacks at the front, Russia began to launch waves of missiles and drones against Ukraine, the attacks are described as "indiscriminate against civilians" (Biden). In the first attack the eighty Russian missiles launched caused 17 deaths and in the November 18 (96 missiles) 15 dead, according to Ukrainian reports. While Russia explained that the attacks targeted the power grid and command points, the Wall Street Journal reported that "most of the attacks hit electrical substations and other targets outside urban centers and distant from civilian residences." The same newspaper mentioned, in its December 2 edition, considerations that do not appear in the Spanish press and that are rare in the European one: "The attacks are part of a Russian strategy to demoralize the population and force the rulers to capitulate, the British Ministry of Defense said on Thursday. However, since the Kremlin did not employ this strategy from the beginning of the war, its effects are becoming less effective." The consideration draws attention indirectly to the "superiority" of Western strategy: to get an idea in the early days of the 2003 Iraq war, the missile campaign against Baghdad and other cities, called "shock & awe" ("Shock & Awe") caused 6700 deaths, according to American estimates.

Regardless of this lower Russian "efficiency" in decision and death, the attacks are certainly criminal and their effects devastating for the civilian population: on November 23, 70% of Ukrainian electricity capacity was swept away by Russian attacks, with the effects on the civilian population that our media document in detail. What is the justification? Foreign Minister Sergei Lavrov offered it at his press conference on December 1. "Ukrainian electrical infrastructures provide combat potential to the Ukrainian armed forces, to nationalist battalions, and the delivery of a large amount of weapons that the West supplies to Ukraine to kill Russians depends on them." Does the reasoning ring a bell?

On May 25, 1999, in Brussels, the infamous Jamie Shea The lie of Kosovo in Germany – Rafael Poch de Feliu, spokesman for that NATO of Javier Solana, a journalist asked him, "you say that you are only attacking military targets, so why are you depriving 70% of the country (Serbia), not only of electricity, but also of water supply?" The answer was exactly the same as Lavrov's: "Unfortunately electricity powers the control systems and command points. If President Milosevic wants his people to have water and electricity, all he has to do is accept the five conditions of NATO (capitulation), until he does so, we will continue to attack those targets that supply electricity to his armed forces. If that has consequences for civilians, it's their problem."

Is Russia supplying Viagra to its troops to carry out violations in Ukraine? The UN Special Representative on Sexual Violence in Conflict, Pramila Patten, told AFP in October that the legend, released in June 2011 in Libya by Atlanticist propaganda in the war against Gaddafi, was a Russian "military strategy", but in November confessed that she did not have the slightest proof of it.

The simple reality is that they take us for idiots. The analysis of the war in Ukraine that does not take into account the Western provocations that led to it, that does not start from its genesis of thirty years and its responsibilities, about which the most moderate thing we can say is that they are shared, is mere propaganda children's literature. Unfortunately that is the information environment in which we are immersed.

John Gast, "American Progress", Allegory, Oil on canvas, 29.2 × 40 cm, 1872. Autry Museum of the American West, Los Angeles, USA. This painting shows Manifest Destiny, the belief in the westward expansion of the United States from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean.

"Fundamentally, people do not want war, the population must be deceived into consenting, or at least not opposing war," Julian Assange, the journalist who denounced enormous crimes and has therefore been imprisoned for ten years and isolated for more than a thousand days in a high-security cell of three square meters, explained a few years ago. in conditions that the UN rapporteur on the matter describes as torture, and pending extradition to the United States where an unfair trial awaits him – because the Espionage Law that accuses him prevents any consideration of the crimes reported and freedom of information – and 175 years in prison. Obviously, Assange's consideration is valid for both sides of this war, but what is being talked about here is ours, the feed with which our "informers" feed us spiritually every day.
