Report: Ukraine's Right Sector Leader Urges Terror Attacks on Russia

By Jason Ditz

March 2, 2014

In addition to being the front-line of Kiev's protests last month, Ukraine's Right Sector is also a major thorn in the side of the interim Ukrainian government's credibility, seemingly the worst-case scenario faction possible.

Western nations had apparently decided to look the other way at the group's overt neo-Nazi affiliations, and the latest reports have the group's leader Dmitryo Yarosh courting terrorists as potential allies for the new Ukraine.

In a post of the Right Sector's social media page, Yarosh claims long-standing Ukrainian support for "Chechen militants," and urges terrorist leader Doku Umarov to launch attacks against Russia in support of Ukraine.

Yarosh claims the ongoing chaos in Crimea provides a "unique chance" for Umarov to defeat Russia once and for all. Russia has sent troops to Crimea to back the autonomous region's secession from the Ukraine. The protester-installed interim government in Ukraine has dubbed this a declaration of war, and has been courting Western intervention on their behalf.
