4 Afghan soldiers facilitated deadly Taliban attack in Kunar

March 15, 2014

Four service members of the Afghan national army (ANA) facilitated deadly Taliban attack on a military base in eastern Kunar province of Afghanistan that left at least 21 Afghan national army soldiers dead.

The incident took place late in February in Ghaziabad district after a group of Taliban militants attacked the military base.

A number of Afghan army soldiers were injured and six others were missing the following the attack.

Two Afghan national army soldiers who were released from the Taliban captivity said that the Taliban attack in Ghaziabad was coordinated by four Afghan troops who had links with the Taliban militants.

Mir Agha and Khairuddin were the two Afghan soldiers who were abducted by the Taliban militants following the attack.

Mir Agha said the map of the military base was given to the Taliban militants by four Afghan soldiers who were working for the Taliban group.

He said the commander of the military base was informed ten days before the incident and was advised regarding the connection of four soldiers with the Taliban group. However, he said the commander did not pay attention to the threats.

This comes as Afghan defense officials earlier had denied that the attack was plotted with the help of Afghan army soldiers.

Mir Agha said his comrades were praised by Taliban and were given the titles of Ghazi Amanullah and Ghazi Wali-ur-Rehman for facilitating the attack.
