British Special Forces back in Afghanistan

August 16, 2015

The British Special Forces have been returned to Afghanistan and reportedly take part in military operations against Taliban and other militant groups.

According to a British media organization these forces together with the special forces of the United States are taking part in military operation almost every night.

The Mirror quotes unnamed defense sources that in reality the troops plan and lead counter-terrorist strike operations.

“In the last six months the British special forces have gone from training Afghan commando units to kicking down doors and arresting Taliban suspects. There have been some pretty hairy firefights but fortunately no casualties.” An unnamed source is quoted by the news agency as saying.

“The Afghan Special forces are enthusiastic amateurs but they do not have the ability to plan and execute counter-terrorist operations.”

The British forces return to Afghanistan at a time the country is overwhelmed with insurgent activities.

Taliban have increased their attacks and Daesh emerged as a new threat to Afghanistan.
