Afghan kid, 4, dies after hit by train on the way to Europe

July 17, 2016

A 4-year-old Afghan child has lost his life as he was on his way to Europe in a bid to find a shelter in one of the wealthiest western European countries.

According to the activists of Refugees in Europe, the child lost his life after he struck with a train in Serbia.

They added that the child along with his family were looking to cross into the western European countries, apparently to find a safe shelter.

Hundreds of thousands of Afghan refugees left the country and headed to the European countries amid political and economic uncertainties in the country.

Scores of Afghan migrants lost their lives while traveling through the most dangerous routes to reach Europe, including the Iranian regions to enter Turkey.

At least 3,657 Afghan refugees returned to Afghanistan from the European countries, the officials in Ministry of Refugees and Repatriations said last month.

The majority of the Afghan refugees opted to return from the European countries as they faced uncertain fate.

The latest death of the Afghan kid comes as the tragic death of an Afghan child sent shockwaves across the country as his family, an Afghan journalist, were trying to reach Europe and drowned off in Turkish coast late last year.
