Deported from Germany, 34 Afghans return to Kabul

Dec 15, 2016

Nearly three dozen failed Afghan asylum seekers have returned home after being deported from Germany, the Associated Press reported on Thursday.

The deportees were quoted as saying they had lived and worked in Germany for years. Back home, they had little job prospects, the young individuals complained.

He had a gainful job and was working in a restaurant in Cologne, Sidiq Kuchai, 23, told the American media outlet.

Hailing from northern Baghlan province, Kuchai lived in Germany for seven years. "I am not happy; everything is different for me here."

It was the first charter flight bringing home the failed asylum seekers from Germany, according to Spiegel Online, which left Frankfurt on Wednesday and reached Kabul Thursday morning.

The next flight is planned for January. The German Interior Ministry said the deportations were part of a deal signed with the Afghan government in October.

Around 3,000 asylum seekers returned to their home country this year under the repatriation programme. Only 18 were deported in the first half of 2016.
