Explosion and gun battle in Farah leaves 7 killed, 46 injured

April 3, 2013

^[1]A heavy explosion rocked western Farah province of Afghanistan early Wednesday morning. The explosion reportedly took place in front of the provincial court of Farah province.

According to local police officials said a number of the gunmen were looking to enter, the court building and clashes between Afghan security forces and the militants are still going on in the area.

Provincial governor spokesman Abdul Rahman Zhwandai confirming the report said clashes between Afghan security forces and militants are still going.

In the meantime provincial security chief Gen. Aqa Noor Kintoz said, around five gunmen in Afghan army uniform attacked the provincial attorney general office. Four of the gunmen were killed and the fifth gunman is still fighting with the Afghan security forces.

He said two of the gunmen detonated explosives packed in a Ford Ranger vehicle near the provincial government compound.

Mr. Aqa Noor also added that the remaining three gunmen entered the court building after the explosion, killing at least four police forces and three civilians.

Provincial hospital Abdul Jabar Shaiq said around 46 people including government employees injured following the incident have been taken to the hospital so far.

Taliban group claimed responsibility behind the incident.
