4 Afghan local police (ALP) officers killed in Badghis

October 24, 2013

At least six Afghan local police (ALP) officers were killed following Taliban militants attack in western Badghis province of Afghanistan.

According to local government officials, the incident took place on Thursday morning in Bala Murghab district, leaving four Afghan local police (ALP) officers dead and two others injured.

Provincial governor spokesman, Mirwais Mirzakwal confirming the report said the police officers were killed following Taliban militants attack on an ALP check post in Bala Murghab district on Thursday.

This comes as at least three Afghan local police (ALP) officers were shot dead by their comrades in southern Kandahar province of Afghanistan earlier this week.

Badghis is among the relatively peace provinces in western Afghanistan. However, local officials have recently warned that militants from various insurgent groups have increased their activities in a number of its districts.

Taliban militants abducted four construction workers on Herat-Badghis highway earlier this month.
