Taliban claims access to confidential security plans for Afghan elections

April 2, 2014

The Taliban militants group in Afghanistan claimed that they have obtained an important document regarding the upcoming elections security plan.

The group following a statement said the security plan consists of information regarding the voting centers and sites in each province.

Taliban in its statement further added that the confidential security plan will help the Taliban fighters to carry out attacks on elections sites during the voting day.

Taliban published a number of pictures which it claims that are parts of the security plan obtained by Taliban intelligence agents.

This comes as the Taliban militants warned earlier this month that they will use all force to disruption the presidential and provincial council.

The group has since then carried out numerous attacks in various provinces of the country including capital Kabul.

Taliban also warned to target all election workers, activists, callers, security apparatus and offices across the country.

Taliban in its statement also urged the Afghan people not to get close to the government compounds, public buildings such as mosques and schools for the polls, suggesting these locations could be targets of attack.
