Russia to get hypersonic weapon in some years

9/26/2016

Russia will have hypersonic weapon in the beginning of the next decade, Boris Obnosov, Director General of the Tactical Missile Equipment Corporation, claimed.

He noted that greatest attention is paid to development of this type of weapons. Hypersonic projects are largely based on the USSR Kholod and Kholod-2, as 'it would be impossible to create such weapons from the very beginning, although there are technologies of the necessary level.

Obnosov also pointed out that in this field the Russian producers compete only with the US and China.

Some US military experts used to report that Russia had already possessed hypersonic weapons. In May 2016 Mike Billington from the Executive Intelligence Review claimed that Vladimir Putin strategically left Obama behind, as the Russians possessed hypersonic weapon, capable of outmanoeuvring any American missile defence systems.
