ISI racing to get Mullah Omar before 'Americans repeat bin Laden mission'

05/10/2011

Pakistan's ISI spy network and the US forces are on a race to get Osama Bin Laden's ally Mullah Omar, who is believed to be hiding in Quetta, near the Afghan border.

Inter-Services Intelligence (ISI) was desperately looking for Omar last night to avoid further humiliation, which the country faced after bin Laden was tracked down in Abbottabad by US forces without the knowledge of their Pakistani counterparts, The Sun reports.

Confirming that they were targeting Omar, a senior ISI official said: "There will be a huge military action in Quetta very soon. The decision has been taken to act before the Americans have a chance to repeat their mission against Bin Laden. We will try to take him alive but if he resists he will be killed."

The decision came after it was revealed that US strike teams were planning to target Omar's hideout based on the data that they found from bin Laden's computer.

Fifty-two-year-old Omar, Bin Laden's right-hand man, has a 25 million dollars reward on his head.
